

“Primitive Intelligence”

A Clairvoyant’s View

The following are insights about unborn babies excerpted from clairvoyant readings generated by Jean Mastellone.

Conception

- At the exact moment when the sperm penetrated the egg, there was an explosion of light. That explosion was the beginning of a new human life. The life had a conscious primitive experience of self. The light consisted of white and blue natural energies. I interpreted the white energy as the energy of ‘intuitive knowing.’ The blue energy was the energy of ‘basic intelligence.’

Psychological Intelligence

- This ‘intuitive knowing and basic intelligence’ were psychological aspects of the embryo. It was different from the intelligence I saw animating the physical body cells. The cellular intelligence (the DNA) was forming the physical body with amazing precision and, unlike the embryo’s psychological intelligence, did not seem aware of itself.

DNA Intelligence

- The embryo’s physical cells began multiplying with increasing rapidity. There was intelligence in each tiny cell. Each cell was actively alive, and seemed to know exactly what it should be doing. It, the DNA, was shaping the embryo’s body, while, at the same time, the minute embryo was participating by using his or her primitive awareness and willingness to live to assist in the developmental process. The spinning cells began generating a yellow light, which, to me, signified 'expression.

Embryo's Primitive Will and Awareness

- I observed what appeared to be a primitive awareness and an impulse to live and survive. In one tiny consciousness, I sensed not only the desire to live, but also, an awareness of the possible danger of loss of life. I experienced these two impulses in the embryo as a desire for independence and a quickening sense of fear of potential loss.

- The impulses seemed to be coming from the embryo's will and awareness, which were the essential elements of his or her primitive consciousness and beingness. Every embryo had a will that seemed essentially no different from the will of an adult.

Choices with Awareness

- I have seen an embryo, only three weeks old, energetically resist and fight for her life when she was about to be aborted, even before there was any indication that the embryo was consciously aware of her mother's existence.

- She seemed to be pleading for her life and fear her death when her mother was seriously considering aborting her. This reaction happened without the exchange of thoughts or images. It seemed to come from a basic and natural subconscious knowing that she was alive and threatened.

Consciousness is Constantly Present

- Our lives appear dependent on us being committed to the full experience of being human, within a human body, from the first moment of conception and the formation of the first cell. Each person participates in his or her physical and psychological development and is an integral part of the totality of being human, from the very beginning of our lives. Memory appears to start at conception.

- Scientific studies show that by six months in-utero, unborn babies are as psychologically developed as one-year old infants. Proper baby understanding and positive parenting hinge on expectant parents being sensitive to the reality of their unborn baby. []
